Now that we have completed a few weeks of classes, everyone has a good idea of what this “college” thing is about. As we progress through the summer keep in mind the goals you have set for yourself. Although the classes and mandatory events may get tiring, remember to always rise to the challenge in every endeavor that you encounter. You can do it.

Your peers have spoken and you have been chosen.

Mohandas Gandhi

There will have to be a rigid and iron discipline before we achieve anything great and enduring, and that discipline will not come by mere academic argument and appeal to reason and logic. Discipline is learnt in the school of adversity.

Good job to everyone who rose to the challenge this week on their tests and quizzes. Through hard work and dedication, your efforts have paid off. If you did not do as well as you had liked, you still have time to come out of the class with a good grade. Remember to utilize the professors and CAs if you have any questions or concerns regarding the class. Keep up the good work!
