The Gallo Wine Campaign

Until the 1970s, wine consumption in this country was relatively low and American wines were considered inferior to those from Europe. Although Gallo is one of America’s oldest wine producers, its products were perceived to be poor. Throughout the 1980s and 90s, the vintner strove to improve its image through advertising. This larger-than-life approach began in the early 90s and continues today.